Around the NationHarvard Says It Got $456,000 CIA Funds

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

Thirteen programs at Harvard University received $456,000 from organizations acting as Central Intelligence Agency conduits between 1960 and 1966.

This report was made by Humphrey Doermann, assistant to Franklin L. Ford, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences.

Among the programs supported by such funds, the University report said, was the summer school's international seminar, headed by Henry A. Kissinger, a consultant and adviser on international security matters to a number of Administrations.

He acknowledged that the seminar received $135,000, but said he was unaware that the CIA had given partial support to the seminar through private foundations.
